

Call for paper “Macroeconometric Workshop”

12 December, 2019 at German Institute for Economic Research (DIW Berlin), Germany

We are pleased to announce that on December 12, 2019 DIW Berlin will host the “Macroeconometric Workshop”. The workshop covers presentations of both methodological and applied contributions on the frontier of research in quantitative macroeconomics, with a focus on empirical research. The event is organized with the support of the Departments of Macroeconomics and Forecasting of DIW Berlin, the School of Business & Economics of Freie Universität Berlin, and BERA (Berlin Economics Research Associates). We are happy to announce the Keynote lecture by Helmut Lütkepohl.

For paper submissions, please send a full paper to macroeconometrics@diw.de no later than October 15, 2019. Extended abstracts will not be considered. Notification of acceptance/rejection can be expected by October 30, 2019.

The workshop will be held in the premises of the DIW Berlin, Mohrenstrasse 58, 10117 Berlin, Germany. The workshop starts at 9:00 and ends at 17:00. The workshop is open to both presenters and external participants. It will be followed by a dinner open to both presenters and participants. However, please bear in mind that only a limited number of places is available for external participants. Attendance is free, but we request to register by email no later than November 15, 2019. Traveling and accommodation costs are not covered. All participants are expected to attend the full workshop.

We hope to see you soon in Berlin.

Kind regards,
The organizers
